- 1. These figures do not include the newly established mission-parishes that meet usually in provisional or rented buildings.
- 2. These figures do not include the mission parishes, where there is no regular weekly services.
- 3. These data count only those priests who are officially assigned to the parishes, and they do not include the so-called "attached" clergy who may work somewhere else.
- 4. (*) indicate those educational facilities that don't have the regular clergy-training programs, but offer possibility for any general, supplementary or post-graduate theological studies.
- 6. Parochial or "all day" schools are those alternative elementary or middle or high schools which provide with general education and are recognized by the state. At the same time, they are maintained by the Church and, consequently, provide with advanced Orthodox religious and "ethno-cultural" education.
